Administrative History or Biographical Sketch

Henry Hulbert Douglas was born in a log cabin near Bozeman, Montana on February 27, 1906 to Emma Catherine and Elmer Allen Douglas. He attended Billings Polytechnic Institute, the University of Montana at Missoula, and graduated from Oberlin College in 1929. Douglas went on to serve as a librarian at the American Merchant Marine Library Association and later as a librarian at the Library of Congress in 1937.

During World War II, Douglas enlisted in the Army on May 9, 1942 at Fort Myer, Virginia. He was stationed with the 6th Army Air Force at Albrook Field in Panama and later transferred to the Chinese Air Force Detachment at Tyndall Field in Florida serving as a Chinese interpreter.

After the war, Douglas returned to the Library of Congress, later worked for the Office of Technical Services at the Department of Commerce, and went on to become a librarian for the Mary Riley Styles Public Library in Falls Church, Virginia.

Starting in 1960, Douglas and his wife formed and operated a printing business, Econoprint, for 21 years. In 1967, Douglas founded the Pioneer America Society which published articles about historic sites in Northern Virginia. He was editor for the Society's "Pioneer American" and "Echoes of History" journals. A long-time resident of Falls Church, he also served as the chairman of the Falls Church Historical Commission and also its historian and archivist.

Douglas authored a number of books including "Caves of Virginia" (1964); "Falls Church, places and people" (1981) as well as edited and published the second edition of Herbert H. Harwood's "Rail's to the Blue Bridge" which included Douglas' photos of rolling stock and scenes along the Washington & Old Dominion Railroad. Henry H. Douglas died on January 16, 1989.
